My '84 318i with central locking did the same thing. When you go to lock the car, all the other doors get their signal to lock from either the control unit (with the remote) or from the switch on the door you stuck the key in. If one of the motors is dead or going in another door, it get's the signal, but doesn't lock.

The central locking unit is located behind/below the drivers side kickpanel speaker. To get to it you need to remove the kick panel which is held on by 1 Philips screw, and the two bolts holding down the hood release lever. Once the kick panel is removed, the speaker is held in by 3 screws. Once removed the central locking unit is held in by a bracket which also holds the interior light relay.
